AN EXCITING SCENE. - The inhabitants witnesses, a day or two ago, of a chase of the most exciting character. A distin-guished velocipede rider appears every day on this boulevard, and performs re-markable feats in that line of horsesses, day on this boulevard, and performs re-markable feats in that line of horseman-ship. He had just bestridden his bicycle, when cries of "Out of the way! Kill him?" resounded through the streets. The foot-passengers darted into the houses, closing the doors after them with houses, closing the doors after them with a crash, and the velocipedist was left alone on the road, along which rushed an enormous dog, with staring coat, in-damed eyes and jaws bathed in foam. The mastiff, which was evidently mad, perceiving the bicycle and its unlucky rider, instantly bounded after it, and a cloud of dust soon concealed the details of the chase. The velocipedist whirled his machine round and round tables. many turns as a hare, but the horrible brute followed him closely. At length, in despair he darted forward at full speed, when suddenly a cry of alarm burst from the spectators at the windows. The bicycle had broken down and the rider had been thrown senseless to the ground, whilst the dog, grathering up his remaining strength, sprang towards him. But by this time the police had headed the animal, and one of them cut off its tore-paws with one stroke of his sword. est as the furious beast was about to throw himself upon his victim, who soon awoke from his swoon to find himself afe and sound.
